I am running for council because I genuinely believe in our community, our spirit, and our potential. For the past 12 years, I've volunteered and worked tirelessly both at home and abroad to serve the community, and I've seen firsthand the power of a strong, active community, and I want to bring that focus home to Belmont.

My campaign is built on three promises: a focus on community and liveability, with a commitment to safety and security, ensuring every one of us feels safe in our homes and on our streets, with a dedication to transparent and accountable governance, because you deserve a council that listens and is honest about where your money is going.

I'm not a career politician. I'm a wife, a resident, and a neighbour who shares your frustrations and hopes. I've felt the issues firsthand, and I'm ready to work tirelessly for you. My candidacy is about trust, and I promise to honour it by putting the best interests of every single resident first.
